Lessons learnt from WHO Commission on Social Determinants of Health (CSDH) and its final report 'Closing the gap from a Swedish perspective

Abstract description (EN):

The Swedish Government commissioned the Swedish Institute of Public Health to explore and assess recommendations presented by WHO Commission on Social Determinants (CSDH) in its report "closing the gap" and outline the lessons to be learnt therein and which can be applied within a Swedish context. The institute in collaboration with other actors made a thorough analysis of the CSDH recommendations and presented a series of strategies on how to best tackle health inequities and inequalities in the most vulnerable social groups. Taking into consideration gender perspective in health promotion and disease prevention is primordial for the public health work and reducing health inequalities and inequities as recommended by the SNIPH.
